Trainer

Dr Nick Banks is a Clinical Psychologist and Senior Lecturer in Psychology. He has researched and published material on 'mixed race' children and relationships and has developed and delivered many courses on working with 'mixed race' children for social services, psychologists, lawyers and parents. He is of 'mixed race' himself (Caribbean and white English).

This training will help parents and carers better understand their 'mixed race' child's internal world, potential social pressures and how to prepare the child for coping with issues such as racism and identity confusion in perceiving their 'mixed race' selves in a non-mixed, black and white world.

Conflicts and confusions will be discussed through case study material. In addition, parents and carers' own common potential personal conflicts and confusions will be discussed in a practical way to help them develop a better understanding of how to positively meet their 'mixed race' child's needs.
