Raising Kinship Children (RKC)

advice line tel. 0113 230 2100

Placing a child in a new family can provide safety and healing for the child as well as an immense sense of fulfilment for the carers. But it can also be a stressful and complex experience for all parties. Many children exhibit challenging behaviours linked to their early experiences, which can be difficult for carers to understand and to manage. In these situations, targeted support and training can make a huge difference to placement outcomes.

Raising Kinship Children (RKC) is a specialist parenting programme for carers whose children were placed relatively recently (around a year or less) and are of pre-school or primary school age. It provides practical and relevant advice to carers who are struggling with challenging behaviour in their children.

Based on a “real world” randomised controlled trial which recorded increased parenting confidence in adopters, it is an authoritative, dependable method of helping carers help their children.

The RKC programme is carried out over ten sessions by PAC-UK-trained carer advisers on a one-to-one basis in carers own homes, or at another convenient venue, or via Skype. A range of optional extra sessions allows the material to be tailored to particular behaviours a child may struggle with.

The programme can also be used with new permanent placement carers (other than Kinship Carers). PAC-UK counsellors have been trained to deliver the RKC programme to individual families as well as groups.

RKC programme topics

Topics covered in the ten-session programme include:

- understanding attachment and how
- children develop new relationships
- using positive attention to change behaviour
- the use of praise and rewards
- clear commands and boundaries
- the use of ignoring
- effective discipline and logical consequences
- problem solving with children

Optional extras

Optional extra sessions cover a range of behaviours, including wetting and soiling, sexualised behaviour, managing difficulties in sibling and peer relationships, fears and anxieties and eating and sleeping problems.

Expectations

There is an expectation that participating carers complete ‘homework’ between sessions. This will be supported with handouts, presented in electronic format, throughout the programme.

Commissioning the RKC programme for professionals

Local authorities, voluntary adoption agencies and independent fostering agencies who would like to train their staff to carry out the RKC programme can contact PAC-UK’s Training Department on 020 7284 5872 or email training@pac-uk.org

A dependable resource

The RKC programme is based on the Enhancing Adoptive Parenting (EAP) programme, which unlike many resources has been tested for effectiveness in a randomised controlled trial as part of the Department for Education’s Adoption Research Initiative.

The trial determined that the EAP programme was an effective aid to the parenting of abused and/or neglected children recently placed for adoption, with participant parents demonstrating significantly positive change at six months post-intervention compared to a control group receiving routine support.

“We found each session extremely beneficial, we put in practice the various strategies over the past 10 weeks with the girls, learned a lot about how to approach various difficulties (which we are already using) and the homework brought it all together.”
